

A Parting Glance

By Helen J. Dixon

As I write this, your face appears before me in all its wonderful splendor.

I remember how you last looked at me-- adoringly, lovingly, longingly.

As we said farewell, we didn't want to part.
Yet we realized it's only a corporeal separation.

For our spirits are linked our souls joined together eternally

Where ever our bodies may be--in space or time-- we are always united.

My love spans the miles.
It travels over bridges or through tunnels
wherever you go, it will find you.

My heart is full of wonder.
You're in my mind and my soul.
It's unbelievable that only a short time has passed for it seems like I've known you my whole life.
